SCHOOL ELECTIONS TO BE HELD FRIDAY

AROUND the TOWNSHIP

Joe Pashote, who runs a garage in Newark, is having a stiff fight on his hands. About 100 sparrows have nested in the rafters of the garage. They drive Joe and his mechanics half crazy with their racket and they go whizzing around the garage at all times of day trailing pieces of string and hay behind them. As fast as Joe pulls down the nests, the birds build new ones.

Mr. and Mrs. Roland Bendel, who live on the Creek road between Niles and Decoto, have added new activities to their already considerable accomplishments. Mrs. Bendel, who is deeply interested in school affairs, has taken a course in tax legislation and now probably knows more about current tax problems than any other person in the township. If you are getting gray hairs about your taxes, ask Mrs. Bendel what to do.

Mr. Bendel has taken up fishing. He is not interested in striped bass but in small fish which eat mosquito larvae. The mosquito abatement commission, whose work he does in this district, has a hatchery full of these small fish. Each week, Bendel takes a supply of them around to the horse and cattle troughs in the township. Water in these troughs has been found to breed many mosquitos.

Since the opening of the skating rink at Irvington, some of its leading citizens have been feeling the call of youth. Raymond Pond and Joe California, for instance, are working up quite a rivalry as to which of them has the better technic. Prof. Pond, has offered to demonstrate on the floor of the rink that he really is the old maestro, so far as Irivington is concerned. Joe, while modestly admitting that he may not be as good as some, is emphatic in his statement that he can skate all around Pond.

It is well worth the trip past the Niles theater and the Wiliamson studio to note the progress of the friendly feud between Jack Williamson and Bill Helm, theater manager. Williamson and Helm are taking a perverse delight in dumping their rubbish on front of each other's places of business. Tuesday morning Williamson found a roll of waste paper and some other debris in his doorway. He promptly took it to the theater next door ,festooned it around he box office and pasted streamers on it advertising Williamson studio Now he's holding his sides and waiting to see what Helm does. If we know Helm, he undoubtedly will do something.

Last week we listed a few of the places on Main street whose owners or managers keep their sidewalks and street front cleaned up daily. The list was not intended to be all inclusive. This week we add the P. C. Hansen Lumber Company's modern building which is always kept spotless, sidewalk swept, show windows dusted, and hence entitled to our award of merit.

Farmer Angry When Amateur Airmen Level Barley Field

NILES — Two amateur airmen found themselves in an embarrassing position Tuesday evening when they undertook to land their light plane near the Dickey clay plant near Niles.

Walt Rosenfield, pilot, picked what looked from the air like a stubble field and set his plane down in it, only to discover that it was waist deep barley belonging to Joe Enos. Due to skillful piloting the plane did not nose over.

Enos appeared on the scene with Constable Tom Silva who talked to Rosenfield and his passenger, Joe F. Donoaan about the damage to the grain. Rosenfield spent nearly an hour running the craft back and forth over the field to knock the standing grain down so that he could take off.

The landing was not forced. Rosenfield picked the spot because Donovan wanted to land to keep a dinner engagement at the Jack Greely home.

PAPPY SHORT'S eyes—the color of bluing water over your hand—shifted to the right warily, though his head remained bent above the sewing-machine motor which he was repairing in Sylvia's sun porch. Sylvia must have left the room, though you couldn't be sure, with those rubber-soled nurse's shoes of hers. He continued a moment longer fiddling with his tiny screw driver and then carefully turned his head full aside. Yes, she was gone. She was due on night shift. Luckily she trusted him completely. That would make it easy.

He heard the front door close a moment later and through the window saw Sylvia drive away in her car. It was a rickety old model, Sylvia's car. Pappy snorted. She could afford a better one if she wanted it. She worked quite regularly and had only herself to support. Besides, there were the pearls—a handful of them—which was as far as her parents had ever gone in the building of a genuine pearl necklace for her when she was a child. He had often wondered why she didn't sell the pearls.

Sylvia kept the pearls in a sandalwood box behind some books in her bookcase. Pappy Short doubted whether another person in the world besides himself knew of their hiding place, or even of their existency. He chuckled. Sylvia certainly trusted him.

Pappy laid down his screw driver and stumped away on his cork leg toward the living room. He swore under his breath at the clumsiness of his leg. It was old when he bought it second hand, and must have been the cheapest cork leg in the world originally. His face lined with bitterness as he dragged it over the floor. He'd be using this leg all his life, like as not. You couldn't buy anything from tinkering at thirty-five cents an hour. That was all Sylvia ever paid him.

Hitching his odious old cork peg along as silently as possible, he crossed and stood before the bookcase. Furtively his eyes moved about the room and swept the street beyond the windows; his ear, also, reported the presence of no human being in the vicinity.

His veiny rough hand was clumsy with the volume of medieval history which he removed from the case. The book fell upon the floor with a heavy slap. Pappy Short jumped, and his eyes fluttered quickly about before he stooped to recover the book. He set it quietly upon an end table and removed two more volumes from the case. Sylvia must have chosen to put her pearls behind the volumes least likely ever to be removed by the roving hand of a guest.

Pappy Short's hand closed quickly on the small sandalwood box. It was locked, but Pappy had little difficulty getting into the box.

He lifted the lid. He gloated. Pearls were money, not beauty, to Pappy. He counted them. Nineteen. That meant he had eleven in his possession. Soon he would have to put an end to this pilfering before Sylvia discovered her loss. She never seemed to look into the box with more than a fleeting glance, to see if the pearls were safe.

He removed a lone pearl with his thumb and forefinger. Always it was just one. He put the pearl in his vest pocket while he re-secured the lock. Then he replaced the box and the books before it. He took the pearl out of his pocket, chuckling with satisfaction . . .

No one would guess, he smiled to himself as he returned to repairing the machine motor, that there were twelve beautiful pearls hidden in his ancient cork leg.

His work completed, he gathered his tools into a worn satchel and let himself out the door. He wished Sylvia were here with her car. She often drove him home. But she ought to—paying him a miserable thirty-five cents an hour! And she had even gone off this time and forgotten to pay him at all!

Pappy Short always arose at nine o'clock unless the weather was stormy. Then he slept until noon. This morning it was stormy. He woke at eleven-thirty.

He reached for his old leg which always stood against the wall by his bed. The feel of it was somehow different this morning. He dragged himself upright and swung his good leg to the floor. He stared at the cork one. It was different! It was new—a brand new leg, and a high-priced one at that! How had it come there, and where—his heart beat suddenly with furious pumps—where was his old leg and the pearls?

Confusion and fear made him fumble with the folded paper he picked up from the floor. It bore his name. Inside was scrawled in Sylvia's hasty handwriting:

"I dropped in on my way home from work this morning. I had forgotten to pay you the dollar for your work yesterday.

"This good new leg I bought for you in appreciation of your good work and trustworthiness, I hope you will like it and be able to get about better. It is just a little surprise I've planned for a long time

SYLVIA.

"P. S.—I took the old leg along with me. I can use it for kindling."

By CHERIE NICHOLAS

EVERY day in every way women who recognize the importance of selecting materials for the fashioning of their costumes that can be "put to the test and not found wanting," are turning to handsome dependable silks that are really and truly pure silk for the solution of their fabric problems.

The fact that a lavish amount of pleating, tucking, shirring and meticulous tailoring is involved in the styling of this season's smartest apparel is proving an added incentive to insist on silk of the better sort that may be relied upon to yield successfully to these varied and sometimes intricate manipulations.

Three outstandingly important fashion trends are presented in the illustration, each of which demonstrates the chic and charm of silk weaves in the current mode. For the perfectly stunning jacket suit the designer handles black and white printed silk crepe as tailor-perfect as if it were wool. The braid-bound edges of the jacket interpret a highly significant styling detail. As to the wide organdy frill, it is a "last word" in accessory chic.

The other standing figure reveals Miss 1936 wearing a navy blue silk sheer with a pleated tunic, for you must know that the pleated tunic is a top-notch fashion for spring and summer. Men's wear buttons go marching down the front of the tunic pictured. Short puffed sleeves follow the latest dictate of the mode. Note that these are designed to give shoulder emphasis as all the newest fashions would have it. A tiny boutonniere and a yellow chamois belt stress the new vogue.

As to this matter of tunics, from all indications they are about to stampede the fashion picture. If in doubt, choose a tunic frock is timely advice, for it is to be tunics by day and tunics by night according to reports from style centers. Some tunics are straight and narrow while other tunics flare about the knees like a bell or a lampshade. Many evening frocks adopt pleated skirts with tunic tops.

Another big fashion feature is the blouse that is all-over pleated like the one shown in the picture. This blouse is of bright green pleated silk chiffon. It is worn with a black silk taffeta suit. Note the pleated frill about the throat. This is a favorite new neckline silhouette. And again please to observe that the sleeves are short and puffed in the latest manner. The smartest flower turbans are topheavy in front. The one topping milady's prettily coiffed head is made of purple silk violets. Purple, green and black is the color scheme of this costume which goes to show how striking the new color alliances are this season.

The new and fashionable bolero costumes bring blouses into the very foreground of the fashion scene. With black bolero two-piece dresses or suits the outstanding color idea is to wear as bright a blouse as the new silk prints can afford, or if not a print, then let your blouse be of a high-color pleated silk sheer. Anyway, go the limit in matter of daring color for your blouse.

PRINT COATS

By CHERIE NICHOLAS

A plain coat topping a print frock is not news but a print coat topping a plain frock is latest news from Fashion town. The model pictured typifies the new mode. In this instance the redingote is of black and white print linen over a black linen dress. The short sleeves proclaim a popular vogue for the summer. Bright silk print coats with monotone silk dresses, also jackets of gay floral silks that contrast plain skirts will be made a big feature during the coming months.

NEW COTTON LOOKS LIKE SILK OR WOOL

Cotton that looks like silk, cotton that looks like wool, cotton as sheer as the gauziest chiffons, cotton velvets, cotton tweeds and cotton laces—all these will march in the fabric parade.

Cord laces will be the tops in spring and summer swank, shown in tailored sports clothes for resort wear now and all-around use later.

Peasant weaves also are slated for high success in natural neutral tones, both in cotton and linen, with bright accessories.

Embroidery, which has been creeping back into the style picture, achieves rampant recognition in the new cotton fabrics. Embroidered surfaces are all over the place, both in soft, homespun type of cotton fabrics for sports wear, and in the organdies and mousselines for evening.

Built-Up Heels Are Tops in New Modes for Daytime

Caprice is the keynote of the new spring styles. While some Paris authorities portend a vogue for Spanish senoritas, Chinese deities and animated modern paintings, most American women are preparing to step forth in sober suits and saucy accessories.

Mannish felts and flower-trimmed trifles flaunt breath-taking colors in the new millinery modes. Tailored waistcoats and the frilliest of feminine blouses have a slightly rakish look. There are 20 gay new glove shades and a dozen stocking tints, while scarfs are more frivolous than ever in color and design.

Book Buttons

Book buttons lend a "highbrow" air to several new mid-season frocks. They are tiny, closed volumes of black enamel whose leaves are edged with gold.

Sumotari, Not Ju-Jitsu, Real Japanese Wrestling

Ju-jitsu is not, as most people imagine, Japanese wrestling. It is merely their art of self-defense. Japanese wrestling is sumotari, a form of athletics in which every ounce of weight counts. It is the national sport, and very popular indeed; Sumo stars receive fees in excess of those commanded by successful baseball players. They are immensely powerful, but also very fat, and look like huge balls of blubber.

Columbus Ship Model In 4th of July Parade

CENTERVILLE—One of the features of the Fourth of July parade at the Washington Township celebration next month will be the float being prepared by Azaveda club, which has retained M. J. Gularte, a clever designer and builder. Gularte has been at work for two months fashioning a replica of one of the caravels of Christopher Columbus.

The model is now approaching completion. Gularte has no blueprints but is working from a picture. He is following every detail faithfully, with molded hull and bow, masts, decks—even the lamps and trimmings.

The craft promises to be a work of art and one that will be coveted by collectors of ship models.

Gularte possesses genuine artistic sense. He already owns a number of ship models, and is planning a replica of the new British Queen Mary, largest ship in the world, which has just completed her maiden voyage to New York. He expects to work from blue prints.

The Lions' club reports Fourth of July plans proceeding apace. Bumper cards advertising the affair were received this week, and are gradually making their appearance on automobiles. The celebration promises to be well advertised and to draw a large crowd.

EDITORIAL COMMENT

By Carl S. Kelty

LOOKING AHEAD TEN YEARS

A lot of building projects are being considered in Washington Township and are likely to be under way before the summer is out, according to R. A. Griffin, Irvington contractor. Just the normal shortage is sufficient to account for considerable building activity, said Griffin.

From other sources it was learned that a survey recently completed showed the Peninsula towns of San Mateo, Burlingame, San Bruno, Redwood City, Palo Alto, San Carlos and a number of others have shown population gains of 114 to 154 per cent respectively ni the last 10 years. In this same period Washington Township population has practically stood still. Likewise San Francisco showed but small increase in population while Oakland registered a marked gain.

True, transportation facilities on the opposite side of the bay are superior. But with the opening of the bay bridge next November this differential in favor of the Peninsula will disappear. Niles is nearer to San Francisco than Redwood City or Palo Alto or San Carlos and about the same distance as Belmont. Niles is much nearer to Oakland and is nearer than most of the Peninsula towns to San Jose.

Present heavy settlement southeastward from Oakland now stops at Hayward. The next movement is almost certain to center in Niles and Washington Township. There is nowhere else to go. Water here is unexcelled. Climate, soil, production, scenery and industrial advantages are such that investigators are always impressed favorably.

It will be surprising indeed if the end of the next decade fails to show a population of 30,000 for Washington Township in place of the present 13,000 plus. And extension of business facilities invariably follows population growth.

San Francisco remains the metropolis, and heavy bridge tolls will be something of a handicap. It is not inconceivable however that Oakland will continue to show the greater growth and in a few years overtake San Francisco—at least in resident population.

THE HILLS OF NILES

The hills of Niles are friendly boys
Bedecked in green and brown,
That know the sorrows and the joys
Of folks about the town.

The "biggest" hills guard jealously
The smaller at their feet
But just beyond they always see
Us humans in the street.

When 'round their slopes the ploughshare glides,
They never fret or fuss,
They know the farmer tills their sides
To grow tame oats for us.

The hills of Niles are really kind
To us folks in the town;
When we look up we always find
Them ever smiling down.

RICHARD B. PHILLIPS.

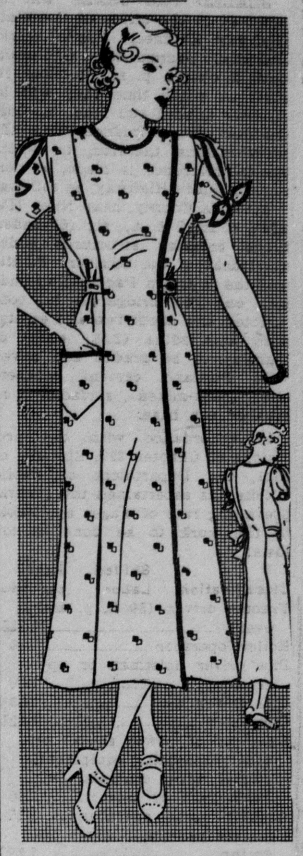
A Slenderizing Coverall Featuring Eyelet Puff Sleeves With Bow Knots



PATTERN NO. 1853-B

You want to indulge in new styles and fancies, of course; but first and foremost as the backbone of any sensibly planned wardrobe comes this utilitarian coverall.

Note especially the sleeve treatment—the wide eyelets and bow knots. Unusual aren't they? And you'll approve the smart adjustable belt which can be tied or buttoned as shown. The front panel buttons at the shoulder and contributes a most appealing feature. Who'd ever guess this model was a smock dress? Surely not the casual observer, who's so taken with the slenderizing lines and neat appearance.

Barbara Bell Pattern No. 1853-B is available for sizes 32, 34, 36, 38, 40, 42 and 44. Size 34 requires 4⅞ yards of 35 inch fabric. Send 15 cents for the pattern.

Send your order to The Sewing Circle Pattern Dept., 149 New Montgomery Ave., San Francisco, Calif.

Uncle Phil Says:

We Do From Motive

Human nature is naturally lazy. We do everything from motive, and the strength of the motive measures the result of the effort.

Some read epigrams and enjoy them; others are so contentious that they want to dispute every one they read.

Hardly anything can make sink the heart of a young man of twenty like being expected to enjoy a job for which he has neither taste nor talent.

Do As You Advise

Children will profit by what their parents tell them if they observe that what their parents tell them corresponds to what their parents do.

When people are deadly determined to call a spade a spade with great frequency, we wish they'd shut up.

In our own personal affairs, each of us thinks he is something of an efficiency expert himself.

Old Sol Is Wise

A sunset never puts on too long a show and it never responds to an encore.

You sometimes have to judge a man by what people don't say about him.

Give too much advice and you'll have it thrown up to you.

It is often twice as easy to do a man a favor who is bashful about asking it.
